Curbs Russia on West.

Count Wachtmeister, the Minister for Authorized, $1,000,000. Foreign Affairs of Sweden, in an interview with the Stockholm correspondent of the Paris Temps, calls attention to the continued existence of the treaty of 1855 negotiated after the Crimean war, in which Great Britain and France engage which Great oritain and Prince engage to furnish the King of Sweden and Nor-way with naval and military forces suffi-cient to co-operate with his forces in re-sisting the pretensions or aggressions of

> The treaty further binds the King not to cede any Swedish or Norwegian terri-tory to Russia, nor to grant Russia any coast privileges. Count Wachtmeister adds that Sweden considers the treaty to be of great importance. The position of France toward Russia has changed, yet he believes Great Britain has not forgotten the treaty and holds to it. The Swedish Minister further remarks that the present situation of Sweden and Norway makes it uncertain whether France and Great Britain will take steps to renew the treaty. Continuing, he says: "The treaty is particularly important to Norway, as it is a guarantee of its coast ter-

Commenting on the the interview, the Temps says the treaty of 1855, which bars Russian expansion westward, comes to notice at a significant moment after the signature of the Anglo-Japanese treaty, which plays the same role in the far East, thus presenting an international problem in the Scandinavian crisis.
